The Mediator’s Role at the Table: A Panel Discussion with Audience Participation

How a mediator help facilitate negotiation in cross-cultural commercial disputes

20 May 2015 (Wed), 6:30pm - 8:40pm, HKIAC, 38/F, Two Exchange Square, Central

Introduction
“It is common place that businesses nowadays are conducted regionally or even globally. The benefits of negotiation and mediation as a means of effective dispute resolution, such as cost-saving and preservation of a harmonious relationship, therefore become more and more appealing to business people who conduct their business in an increasingly international, cross-cultural arena. In this panel discussion, internationally renowned and local experienced mediation specialists will come to share their experiences as mediators, and how they see the challenges in a cross-cultural context, in an interactive manner”

Topics
- The goal of mediation: to get a settlement or to see if a settlement is possible.
- The challenge: to build empathy and trust.
- The frustration: to get disputants to share information directly about their interests from different cultural background, e.g. when conflict is more normally addressed indirectly in Chinese culture.
- The process choice: meeting separately with each disputant prior to putting them together, after putting them together, never separating them.
